THE LOCAL ECONOMY

BUY LOCAL COMES OF AGE

The national campaign to encourage customers to support local businesses is finding an ally: increasingly, critics find corporate chain stores are not the answer.

By Robert Gutman

For the past half-century, corporations—the retailers, and especially in California, the restaurant family—have made plans to attract big fish and big game. They have, for example, established a network of local government, state and federal, to lobby for favorable legislation. They have, for example, established a network of local government, state and federal, to lobby for favorable legislation. They have, for example, established a network of local government, state and federal, to lobby for favorable legislation. They have, for example, established a network of local government, state and federal, to lobby for favorable legislation.

By contrast, businesses that adhere to a true local economy based on small, independent businesses are experiencing a positive outlook. After all, independent businesses are typically located in the same place they serve and employ local workers. They also offer big fish and big game. They have, for example, established a network of local government, state and federal, to lobby for favorable legislation. They have, for example, established a network of local government, state and federal, to lobby for favorable legislation.

leading reasons for the CEOs to pursue corporate profits shifted to local business. (See the GreenSource column.)

"From an economic perspective, supporting local companies is the best way to get a strong local economy," explained Robert Krueger, founder of FoodSource, a national organization for the National Alliance for Local Living Economics (NALLE). It is a nonprofit group that supports and advocates for local businesses and is looking to expand its reach to other parts of the country. "It's a much more realistic impact when people buy local."

Buying local is also more sustainable, especially in economic downturns. Deloitte and GreenSource, a nonprofit organization, conducted a study for the Local 100 and found that local businesses are more likely to survive in downturns than those that depend on corporate chains. "They also began to support local businesses and to support local businesses."

And while the local economy is strong,

"FROM AN ECONOMIC PERSPECTIVE, INVESTING IN LOCAL COMPANIES IS THE BEST WAY TO GET A STRONG LOCAL ECONOMY," KRUEGER-BRANNEY SAID. "THERE'S A MUCH DEEPER ECONOMIC IMPACT WHEN PEOPLE BUY LOCAL."

remains a possibility in local areas. It's a realistic possibility. A company that supports local businesses is more likely to survive in downturns than those that depend on corporate chains. "They also began to support local businesses and to support local businesses."

What Goes Around Comes Around - and Around - and

We see some things twice or three times. First we exchange a well-worn thing from the Berkeley dump, or we accept it from someone who doesn't want it and brings it to us, or we pick it up from someone who calls. We call it to someone else who can use it. That's reuse. It prevents waste. That's our work.

If the thing also has got it, we're here to take it again & it's still useful.

Resources are conserved. The energy and skill that went into manufacturing are respected. People can discard unwanted stuff without wasting. We make a living. Shoppers get a good deal. And it's fun! Come on by.

When local companies already install solar panels and might already have the business-generating energy. But many of these companies are not interested, says John Miller of the Clean Energy and Jobs Campaign, which has been pushing for community solar.

Last month, the state Assembly passed HB 1021, which requires any would-be Community Choice energy company to file the "Community Protection Act" so any it would make Community Choice energy available.

THE LOCAL ECONOMY

THE NEW ARTIST COLLECTIVES

50th Street Collective: Firehouse Art Collective and West Hays Openers Collective create sustainable models for artists in these on-the-Gold Bay

By David A. Ross

Holly Holman's business, Moon Shown, uses sustainable harvested lumber and vegetable-transformation to local-scale sources to show that art "can be local, but also last for a long time." Like many local artists, she struggled to expand her workspace due to a lack of space, equipment and supporting infrastructure. But now, joining the 50th Street Collective two years ago, she has more space, equipment and access to other's knowledge.

An outlier of the 50th Street Collective, which is located on the base of Golden Gate Park, Holman has the ability to be a member of the West Hays Openers Collective, which is located in the heart of the city. "I've got a lot of space, but I don't have a lot of equipment," she says. "I've got a lot of equipment, but I don't have a lot of space." "I've got a lot of equipment, but I don't have a lot of space."

50th Street Collective, which works in sustainable urban development, is one of several artists in the East Bay that are helping to create a more stable community environment for artists. In recent years, the East Bay artists have been facing more and more of being, artist residences - including the 50th Street Collective - which has provided income to Holman and Holman and California lawmakers say, however, that the report does not name the alleged informant, neither any of the major donors listed. Additionally, the report says that the state rules on state records mean that the names of donors are not being provided by the Associated Press members list unless public records and press laws allow them. and 1997. The report from California, however, points to a similar widespread trend reducing the number of Great Plains grasslands. It attributes this to the loss of native grass, increasing, a general breakdown in the riparian zone, and changes in soil levels and seed bank conditions caused, at least in part, by the use of herbicides and pesticides. Presumably, grass is a keystone indicator of the health of the riparian zone. In the Great Plains, grasslands grow on both upland and riparian soils. The fact that grasslands suffer from pesticides, and erosion, at least from riparian land, provides one of the best, most appealing, and easy to see, evidence of the damage to the riparian zone.
